Laocoon's Warning
*From The Aeneid
Translated by Robert Fagles*

... [H]ave you gone mad, you Trojans?
You really believe the enemy's sailed away?
Or any gift of the Greeks is free of guile?

Is that how well you know Ulysses? Trust me, either the Greeks are hiding, shut inside those beams,
or the horse is a battle-engine geared to breach our walls,
spy on our homes, come down on our city, overwhelm us-- or some other deception's lurking deep inside it.

Trojans, never trust that horse.
Whatever it is, I fear the Greeks, specially bearing gifts.
